

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

"the educational process." Under the section on the social process there is a chapter devoted to the analysis of the social process, another to the function of social studies, and still another to social development. The point of view maintained is, moreover, that of control over the individual and social life-processes. Students of sociology will be especially interested in this attempt to rewrite the philosophy of education from the standpoint of social development.

The book is well organized and the main principles are so simply and clearly developed that it should find a large use in colleges and normal schools as a text. If it does, it will certainly aid in the development of a socialized education.

CHARLES A. ELLWOOD

UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

Schooling of the Immigrant. By FRANK V. THOMPSON. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1920. Pp. 408. $2.00.

Now that immigration has risen to its pre-war rate of a million a year, quite obviously serious and nation-wide measures need to be taken for the social assimilation of the immigrant. The problem has long been recognized, and particularly since 1914, but nowhere has it been solved. Even the best attempts at solution are not yet very promising.

This volume, prepared under the auspices of the Carnegie Corporation, presents in systematic form the more suggestive attempts at solution which have been made throughout the country. There is attempt to discover the positive suggestions of value in these experiments, which may be incorporated in some ultimate successful composite plan; and also the shortcomings and failures of various attempts by way of making clear the nature of difficulties to be overcome. Public and private institutions of all kinds are carefully and critically analyzed by way of discovering their strengths and weaknesses in preparing for citizenship. There is also systematic treatment of specific matters such as methods of teaching English, the training of teachers, legislative enactments, the need of individualizing the training, the problems involved in training for citizenship, etc.

Americanization workers will find in this volume innumerable facts and suggestions of value to them in planning and directing practical educational activities. It is specially effective in making clear the nature of the problems.

FRANKLIN BOBBITT

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO